Who's afraid of the big bad wolf?
Who's afraid of the big bad wolf?

Tra hi hi hi

A long, long time ago, in a little village at the edge of a forest, a little girl lived with her mother and her father. This little girl was the sweetest, kindest child there ever was. She was always dressed in a pretty red cloak and hood that her mother had made for her, so everyone began calling her Little Red Riding Hood.

One day Little Red Riding Hood's mother called her and said, "Daughter, your grandmother is very ill. Please take her this pot of butter and some custard that I have made."
"Very well, Mother," said Little Red Riding Hood, and she ran to get her little basket for the custard and the butter. "Be careful," said her mother, kissing her. "Don't stray from the path, don't stop on the way, and don't speak to any strangers."

Little Red Riding Hood's grandmother lived all by herself in a little cottage on the other side of the forest. Little Red Riding Hood had been through the forest alone many times, and knew her way. So she wasn't frightened at all. She skipped merrily along the forest path, enjoying the bright sunshine, the blue sky and the birds singing in the trees.

But suddenly, who should she meet but a Wolf. "Hello, little girl," said the Wolf in his nicest voice. "Where are you going so early on this bright, spring day?"

Little Red Riding Hood was feeling so happy and cheerful that she forgot all that her mother had said to her about not speaking to strangers. She smiled at the Wolf and replied in her politest voice, "Hello to you as well, Mr. Wolf."

"I am going to see my Grandma, who lives on the other side of this forest. She isn't feeling very well today, so I am taking her some custard and a pot of butter. Maybe that will cheer her up" said Red Riding Hood.
"Oh dear," said the Wolf, still in his nicest voice. "How very sad that your Grandma isn't feeling too well! I shall go and visit her as well. I am sure she will feel much better if I do!"

Mr Wolf raced on ahead to Grandma's house and we all know what happened there .....

..... or do we?

When Red Riding Hood arrived at the cottage, she said: "What's the time Mr Wolf?" And he scratched his big head And he said .....

"Five o'clock – it's early
And I'm still in bed!"
